of Bounty

Northeastern Louisiana offers some of the most unknown and exciting birding and wildlife viewing opportunities in the country. Exploring its mystical cypress swamps, river bottoms, wetlands, and pine forests will reward even the casual visitor with glimpses of brilliant yellow Prothonotary Warblers, fascinating Pileated Woodpeckers, beautiful Roseate Spoonbills, and breathtaking flocks of waterfowl and shorebirds that can number in the thousands.

Northeastern Louisiana is a region of wealthy natural resources, and was once part of a center of plant domestication thousands of years ago, before European colonization. This agricultural heritage lives on, built upon rich and productive soils of the Mississippi Alluvial Valley. All combined, the region's agriculture, aquaculture, and forestry generates nearly $2 billion in annual revenues.

Despite substantial conversion of natural bottomland forest habitat to agriculture and silviculture, excellent birding opportunities remain. Many state and federal lands are managed for wildlife, including the threatened Louisiana black bear, and declining forest songbirds, such as Kentucky Warblers and Wood Thrushes. Many regional specialties can still be found in abundance. Even birding along back roads through pastures, shrublands, and aquaculture impoundments can produce a great diversity of birds in a relative small area, from Painted and Indigo Buntings, to Pectoral and Upland Sandpipers, to Wood Storks and Whitefaced lbis. In addition, upland regions provide opportunities to see piney woods specialists like Red-cockaded Woodpeckers, Brown-headed Nuthatches, and Henslow's Sparrows.

HABITATS

Northeastern Louisiana can broadly be broken down into five habitat types: forest, shrub-scrub, agriculture, wetlands and water, and urban.

FOREST

Batture – This habitat is primarily found levee between river and а that а experiences prolonged periods of flooding. Birds like Painted Buntings and Yellow-billed Cuckoo can be common in this pioneer forest community during the summer breeding season. During spring and fall migration, these forests can provide productive stopover habitat and concentrate songbirds like warblers, flycatchers, and vireos. Also, look for nesting Bald Eagles from early fall through late spring and Red-shouldered Hawks year-round.

Bottomland Hardwood Forest - These forests support some of our most diverse bird communities in the region, highlighted by Swainson's Warblers, Kentucky Warblers, Summer Tanagers, Pileated Woodpeckers, and Barred Owls, among many others. Once dominant across much of low-lying areas of the region, only about 20% of bottomland forests remain in the Lower Mississippi Alluvial Valley. Much of what remains is on protected land, but private landowners can receive incentives programs like the Agricultural through Conservation Easement Program to restore bottomland hardwood forest.

Cypress-Tupelo Swamp – During the summer, Prothonotary Warblers and Northern Parulas can be thick in these areas, and also watch for Yellow-throated Warblers. In the winter, Goldencrowned Kinglets and Brown Creepers can be surprisingly common compared to other forested habitats. Rusty Blackbirds are also often associated with these forests, but more often are seen foraging in nearby wet agricultural lands, parks, and yards. These forests can be extensively flooded, only drying during droughts, and are often associated with water bottoms within bottomland hardwood forest systems.

Riparian Forest – Associated with smaller streams, these seasonally flooded forests are usually denser with more vertical structuring, and are favorite haunts of birds like Louisiana Waterthrushes and Worm-eating Warblers during the summer. In winter, look for Fox Sparrows and Winter Wrens, which are much harder to find in other habitats.

Mesic Hardwood Flatwoods – This regionally rare habitat is only found along the Macon Ridge in West Carroll, Richland, and Franklin Parishes. It is characterized by saturated soils and dominate trees include mockernut hickory, blackgum, and a variety of oaks. Although the mid-story and understory tree, shrub, and herbaceous community are relatively diverse, the bird communities are often similar to habitats surrounding these remnant stands.

Mixed Hardwood-Loblolly Forest - These upland forests are dominant along the western edge of the region. In some areas, prescribed burning is used to control hardwood trees and facilitate the growth of more fire-adapted pines, as well as an understory comprised of herbaceous and scrub-shrub vegetation. Common piney woods birds include the Brown-headed Nuthatch and Pine Warbler, but Bachman's Sparrow, a rapidly declining species, and the endangered Red-cockaded Woodpecker can also be found year-round in well managed stands. In most areas, however, fire is not a dominant management practice, but even so, these hardwood forests support a variety of bird species like the Eastern Towhee, Brown Thrasher, and White-eyed Vireo.

SCRUB-SHRUB

Scrub-Shrub Swamp – These habitats can be excellent for colonial-nesting waterbirds, such as Little Blue Heron, Green Heron, and both night-heron species. Poorly drained and frequently flooded, scrub-shrub swamp are often found at the margins of swamp forests and bayous, and are dominated by shrubs like buttonbush.

Regenerating Forest – Depending on the successional stage, species like Northern Bobwhite, Prairie Warbler, Yellow-breasted Chat, and Indigo Buntings can be quite common. Never dominant in the region, these habitats are important to species that depend on early successional growth.

OPEN WATER AND WETLANDS

Sandbars – Sandy bars along bends in larger rivers are particularly extensive within the banks of the Mississippi River. Kept mostly unvegetated or in an early successional stage by high water events and scouring, this unique habitat is colonized by only a few species of plants. Along the Mississippi River, sandbars provide nesting habitat for Threatened Least Terns.

Upland Lakes – The upland reaches of the region have several large man-made and natural lakes that provide excellent fishing, boating, and other recreational activities, including birding.

Top: Great Blue Heron Center: Long-billed Dowitchers Bottom: Little Blue Heron

Marsh Lakes – Shallow lakes with emergent wetland vegetation provide excellent habitat for waterfowl and long-legged wading birds, like herons and spoonbills. In these marshes, look for King Rails year-round, Least Bitterns during the summer, and Sedge and Marsh Wrens in winter.

Swamp Lakes –Shallow stagnant lakes with large cypress trees can support impressive nesting rookeries of wading birds.

AGRICULTURE

Northeastern Louisiana is an agriculturally dominated landscape, with productive soils supporting a variety of crops, forestry products, and fruit. In summer, look for fallow fields supporting breeding Eastern Meadowlarks and Dickcissels, as well as migrating Bobolinks. In winter, American Pipits, Horned Larks, and even Lapland Longspurs can be found in open fields. During migration, Scissor-tailed Flycatcher and the occasional Western Kingbird can be found along cotton fields. Aquaculture, including catfish and crawfish ponds, can attract wading birds, like Roseate Spoonbills, all three species of ibis, a variety of herons and egrets, and Osprey and Bald Eagles.

URBAN

Being slightly warmer than surrounding natural areas, and with homeowners offering feeders and bird-friendly gardens, a surprising diversity can be supported in human-modified landscapes. In particular, winter hummingbirds like the Rufous Hummingbird are becoming more frequent in the region, and feeders can attract a variety of attractive birds like American Goldfinches, Dark-eyed Juncos, Chipping Sparrows, and Brown-headed Nuthatches.

KEY

- C = common (reasonably expected to be found)
- u = uncommon (found in low numbers or in a limited subset of habitats)
- r = rare (not expected on a regular basis or present in very low numbers)
- X = accidental (only one or a few records)

Bird watching is one of the fastest growing activities in America. In the State of Louisiana, bird watching is considered an agritourism activity and is covered under the Agritourism Limited Liability Law (La. R.S. 9:2795.5) passed by the Louisiana Legislature in 2008. The law assists agritourism operators who might be vulnerable to lawsuits and who have difficulty in obtaining liability insurance. The law limits the liability of an agritourism professional for injuries that occur through no fault of the agritourism professional. An agritourism professional who qualifies can complete a plan of operation and submit the plan to the LSU AgCenter's Agritourism Coordinator. Once approved, the plan is forwarded to the Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry for certification. The process takes less than six weeks to complete.
